perfect spiral. Instead, at the point where incline and loop met there was a curve that strongly resembled a right angle.

Two Gaps to Jump.

Mr. Johnson's loop-the-gap resembles to some extent a regulation loop-the-loop. There is this great difference, however. At the very topmost point of the curve there is to be a gap of from four to five or six feet. Then after making the curve, the rider, instead of whirling down to terra firma via a small inclined platform, has to jump a bigger gap, a gap that has been formed in the loop itself by the falling of a grap, released when the cyclist passes a certain point in his journey round the curve.

Suppose the "trap door," so to speak, should not drop after the cyclist had started round the curve? Well, then, there would be a position vacant for some trick rider. But says the inventor, the trap will fall. There is no reason to doubt him after seeing how perfectly the model works.

Last night in the presence of some fifty spectators, mostly neighbors who have watched the strange thing go up fifty spectators, mostly neighbors who have watched the strange thing go up steadily day by day. Mr. Johnson rode down the 25 degree incline several times, striking the bottom on each occasion with an acceleration that carried him far down Franklin avenue toward Third South street. That the inventor has skill and nerve as well as the street which had it been loosened by the falling fence, would have made the escape of any person caught under it almost impossible: inventor has skill and nerve as well as theory and determination was demon strated during the few seconds that elapsed between the start and finish. Small "Bike" is Used.

The "bike" itself is a little forty-seven-pounder, about half the weight of the wheels ordinarily used. Though the man behind the bars had no tape to guide him during his descent, he fol-lowed a straight course as truly as though he were pedaling along a cement sidewalk. Each time he ran squarely over a little bit of paper at bottom of the incline, his sole guide. Johnson first became imbued with the idea of making a world's startler in July, 1903, while working for the tele-phone company. A few months later he gave up his position in order to deleap scheme. Two models were made last spring, the third was completed and sent to patent headquar-ters at Washington, D. C. On July 28, 1904, the patent was allowed. Mr. Johnexpects it will be finally granted and issued this month.

ear, weighing the same as himself and bicycle, around the broken curve before he attempts the feat. Once the car hits the bottom in safety, Mr. Johnson will himself essay the feat. Will he suc-eed in making himself the principal "in the most marvelous exhibition ever presented to the public," or will some-thing go "wrong" at a vital minute and make it impossible for the daring rider to complete his journey as far as the loop-the-gap is concerned? An amuse-ment-loving public awaits with inter-one sees how the little model which Johnson has at his home, 164 East Second South street, works, it becomes casy—easy to see where the gaps are and easy it would seem to get by them on a bike.

A little agate marble which rolls swiftly down the model incline and makes the two jumps in safety is, however, the one thing that justifies this conclusion. But if a marble will do it all right; why cannot a man come out unscathed? And that's just the point that Mr. Johnson wants to impress on the public. His spine-cooling amusement-provider is guaranteed to provide the chills without the slightest danger. Why? Because the inventor claims that it will be built upon scientific plans, strongly, and with the proper spiral effect.

Men have gone to their death, he claims, because the loop upon which they were performing was faulty in construction. To this fact he attributes the fatal fall of Otto De Ryder at Utahna park several weeks ago. He takes into account the fact that De Ryder was probably inexperienced, but believes that the loop proper was not a lister of sand to get the sand off the spor nothing was faulty in construction. To this fact he attributes the sum of the spor nothing was faulty in construction. But if a marble will do it to the spor nothing was the sum only Mrs. Kendall's shuiders were visible. Haworth Tells His Story.

The affidavit is as follows:
"I am the convicted defendant in State vs. Haworth, and am now serving life imprisonment. I never killed Sandail, and had nothing to do with his murder. I do not know who committed the murder. At the time of the murder, March 28, 1899, I was living with my family at Ogden, on Grant avenue. On March 28, 1899, James Stevens was arrested for stealing a bale of hay. I was with Billy Costello (betof hay. I was with Billy Costello (better known as "Stuttering Bill.") Both of us were drinking, and while I do not say we were together every minute, we were not separated very long at any one time. I can give no particular account of my movements that day, save that we were at various saloons, that I was at the police station, that we visited Mrs. West's that evening, and that after visiting at Mrs. West's, Costello and I went uptown again, and that we were at George Barr's saloon at about midnight. After leaving Barr's we of the Little Queen saloon until recently, and never told that to any one till I told Mr. Weber in June, 1904, in the presence of Warden Pratt. I do not know how many horses I had in March, 1899, but I probably had five or six—I usually had at least that number.

I thought my food was poisoned and refused to as that it tasted wrong. I thought men had been murdered and buried under the steps of the jail. I don't know why I had that idea. I do know that I firmly believed such to be the case.
